SITUATION SUMMARY

2017 Statewide Winter Storms

EMAC and Public Assistance - 2017 Winter Storms

Cal OES Recovery Division identified the need for Public Assistance subject matter experts to assist with the aftermath of the 2017 Severe Winter Storms. Accordingly, Cal OES requested assistance from other states through the Emergency Management Assistance Compact (EMAC) - the Nation's mutual-aid system. New Jersey and Colorado provided personnel that arrived on Monday, 06/13/17. Both states along with other potential states will be providing support between now and the beginning of September at various Joint Field Offices throughout California. The goal is to assist those impacted counties in identifying disaster related damage and program eligibility.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

 Periods of gusty westerly winds in The Delta region next few days ***

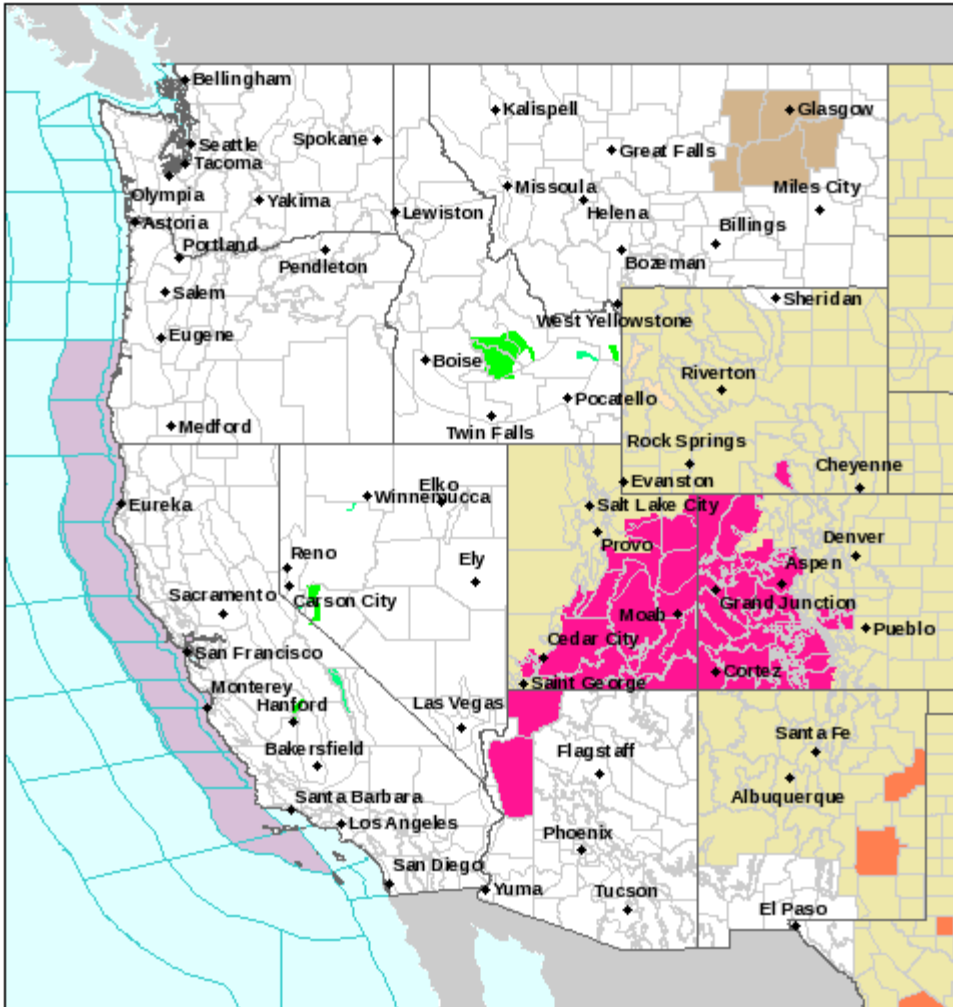

A low pressure trough that has been over Northern California for a few days will be moving eastward as high pressure moves in from off the Pacific. There will be a warming trend for a few days then temperatures will hold above normal through the weekend with the warmest inland valleys 100-105. A small weather system will arrive from off the Pacific Friday and move quickly through the region that may cool things down a little. No thunderstorms are expected today or Thursday, but there is a slim chance of isolated afternoon and evening thunderstorms across the northern areas with that system Friday. Otherwise, conditions will generally be dry across Northern California for the next 7 days. Early next week appears likely to be somewhat cooler as a slightly stronger trough moves over the Pacific Northwest and Northern California Monday and Tuesday with close to seasonable temperatures at the mid and upper 90s in the warmest areas. Any thunderstorms the trough might generate early next week appear mostly likely to occur Monday near the Oregon border. Periods of gusty westerly winds will be in The Delta region into Friday with peak gusts 20-30 mph in the favored areas. No significant winds are expected across the rest of the Northern California region over the next week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Breezy in and near the desert today

Sustained onshore flow will continue to bring a cooling trend to the area today. Yesterday, high temperatures were 2-3 degrees cooler over many areas, and today, temperatures will shed another 5-7 degrees. Expect readings to range from the 70s at the coast to the 90s in the valleys to 108 in the desert. The strongest winds today will be over the Kern County Mountains and Antelope Valley where west winds of 20-30 mph with gusts to 40 mph will be possible. Minimum RH will continue to be in the single digits in desert-adjacent areas of the mountains. Thursday will likely be the coolest day this week with marine layer coverage reaching some interior valleys in the morning. Winds are expected to be light Thursday into the weekend. A brief warmup is expected Friday and Saturday when valley temperatures will climb back into the upper 90s to near 100, but a deeper trough is expected to arrive early next week which will cause temperatures to fall back to near seasonal averages. Night through morning stratus will likely return to the valleys next Monday and Tuesday. Long range models indicate warmer and more humid weather is likely during the second half of next week. Southeasterly flow may bring a chance of thunderstorms after next Thursday.
